DESCRIPTION

In an increasingly diverse practice of family law, it is ever more important to strive to promote inclusion and to fight against prejudices that clients, and even legal professionals, face in their cases. Biases are created subconsciously over time and come from a person's development, experiences, and societal conditioning. They are often difficult to detect and even harder to address because they are latent in nature. This program will provide insight to the biases and educate attendees in overcoming them. It will include sessions on representing LGBTQIA youth in family court and addressing biases in practice and in court.
